Is talking on the phone while you work a pain in the neck?

If you're a professional that works on the computer while talking on the phone, you know what a pain it is holding it to your ear with your shoulder. At the end of a long call, your neck is stiff and your shoulder sore. By the end of the day, you're thinking about a visit to the chiropractor. And it's not doing your typing any favors, either.

Maybe you've thought about getting one of those fancy wireless headsets, but you'd need to upgrade your phone system or buy a lot of extra equipment. But what if you didn't have to?

The BRC A332 is a hands free, self contained, cordless phone system that doesn't require anything extra. There's no need to buy expensive new phone equipment, since this self contained system works with your existing phone lines.

The dial pad with built in belt clip means you're free make or receive calls. The backlit screen lets you know who's calling before you answer, even in the dark. And the noise canceling headset gives you the freedom to take notes, type, or even pour coffee while always coming in loud and clear.

Cut the Phone Cord

When you want to get up from your desk and walk around, you're free to roam. The BR-22 uses DECT 6.0 technology, which means you get crystal clear calls up to 300' away from the base station. There's no interference from wireless networks or other electronics.

The base station doubles as a convenient charger for the dial pad, and allows you to talk while charging. When fully charged, the battery gives you up to 10 days of standby time, and up to 8 hours of talk time. So you'll never have to worry about being cut off on long calls.
